Four Heroes Appear in the Final Scene and Take Sweet Revenge to Extent of 4-to-3 Victory, While 74,000 "Soles" Patter Approval

By Charles A. Taylor

A nine-act melodrama was unfolded before 37,000 fans at the Polo Grounds yesterday afternoon. It was much more thrilling than "Bertha the Sewing Machine Girl," for this particular sensation had a diamond for its setting and included in the cast were four heroes and two villains. And talk about a real climax, well, just ask any one of the 74,000 "soles" in pit and gallery whether they did not pound the concrete beneath them to bits when in this ninth and final act the four heroes foiled the two

Of course, it is conceded that it was a ball game being played. The reference to the Polo Grounds should be sufficient to enlighten the millions in the world of fandom who were not on hand that such was the case and that the Giants won as they did by a score of

But it was a melodrama, after all, and in order to keep it within the nine acts it is imperative that the four heroes and the two villains should be named right now. The heroes were Frank Snyder, Alphonse Gaston, Georgie Burns and Dave Bancroft. The villains were Rube Marquard and Pat Moran.

Kelly Bats in First Run The first act opened with a run for r boys. Burns, one of the heroes de-

Ross Young walked and the 74,000 "soles" began to patter their first tuttoo on the concrete. Here was Kelly and the bases full. But all Long George did for the cause was an infield out, which for the cause was an infield out, which brought Burns across the plate.

The next two acts were most commonplace, as Arthur Nehf for the Giants and the Rube for the Reds were sending the batters off stage with nary a round of applause from pit or gallery. But in the third act the home talent produced a ripple of appreciation from the audience by increasing their run total to two.

Everybody thought the affair a comedy at this juncture and all agreed that there was no question as regarded a happy ending. But villain No. 1 in the person of Rube Marquard appeared upon the stage in the fifth, and when he had finished his dastardly work gloom of the heaviest sort had settled upon bleachers and stands.

work gloom of the heaviest sort had settled upon bleachers and stands. This fifth act introduced one Fonseca who rapped safely over Rapp for a single. The veteran of the baseball stage, old Dode Paskert, hit savagely to this same Rapp, who made a wonderful stop and throw to Fordham Frisch for a force-out of Fonseca. But Crane lined a single to left, which put Old Paskert on third. Hargrave walked and the bases were all occupied when the villain Rube Marquard came sneering to the plate.

Game Tied in Knots

Rube delivered his fell blow on the Rube delivered his fell blow on the first ball pitched, his shot traveling to right for a hit on which Paskert and Hargrave tallied, tieing the score. But the end was not yet. For the villanous Rube counted himself an instant later on Bohne's sacrifice fly to right.

Polonious Peritt was pressed into duty in place of the battered Nehf in the eight and Poll got along very nicely while the villains were chuckling from bench and field over their one-run lead. The 37,000 conducted themselves as most folks do when they kicking on the decisions of Umpire Bill Brennan throughout the entire game. In fact, he almost "extinguished" himself on two or three occasions. Rube Marquard, too, kicked villainously and, of course, futilely.

So the four heroes by their numerical supremacy, if nothing else, vanquished the two villains.

Frank Snyder, who is banging the ball about with startling consistency, staggered the villain Rube with a double which bounded from the left field wall. The jam at the exit gates was halted, as Jack Monroe was dispatched to second base to run for bulky Snyder. Alphonse Gaston was then introduced as batter for Poll Perritt. Alphonse bunted so wisely and so well that he not only sent Monroe to third but also reached first himself in safety.

George Burns spoke emphatically with his bat by driving the ball to left center for a hit that brought Monroe over with the tying run. Walker, running for Gaston, slid into third safely and Burns shot into second on the throw-in. CLEVELAND, May 15 .- The Yankees went into first place in the American League pennant race this afternoon by beating the Cleveland Indians by a score of 8 to 2. The Yanks outplayed their rivals at every turn and bunched their hits when hits meant runs.

The Yankees started by knocking Coveleskie off the rubber in three frames, and they welcomed Caldwell in fine style. Three runs were made cast your bread upon the off Slim in the fifth inning.

More than 30,000 fans were on hand ◆ and many of them left the grounds in disgust before the end of the game. The mob around the outskirts of the field made ground rules necessary, and this made ground rules necessary, and this accounted for a few of the doubles of the Yanks. However, crowd or no crowd, New York would have won.

Waite Hoyt was in fine form and kept his hits scattered. He lost the combination once and forced a runner home, but his work was uniformly good. Nine hits were made off him and not more than two were in any one frame. His support was good and Erin Ward made the only Yankee error.

Coveleskie Batted Hard

Cordial to the point of being effusive was the greeting tendered to Coveleskie by the Yankees. Roth opened with a single to left, and when Peck rolled a teasing grounder to Sewell. Roth arrived at second. Ruth was passed without a struggle and then Pinn filled the out a struggle and then Pipp filled the sacks with a tap to Coveleskie. Coveleskie put on the juice for Meusel, but Long Bob crashed through the infield for a base hit, scoring Roth and Ruth. The Indians failed to score in their half of the first but they were decked. Two runs were hung up for the Yan-

Two runs were hung up for the Yankees in the third, two hits doing the trick. Pipp hit hard to Sewell, but was thrown out. Meusel doubled into the left-field crowd. Baker arched one into the centerfield crowd for a two-bagger and Meusel scored.
